

Our founding fathers brought into existence the most beautiful, free country in the world. Many have made triumphs since then, and many have made mistakes. Together, the citizens of this country have been born, lived, changed, and died.

Together, we have stood united through many a war and many an error. Let us go on being united, and on the principles that those founding fathers laid down so long ago. Let us not beat down one another, or stand in each other's way. Let us instead build one another up, so that the great light of liberty may be seen from our tower. Let us, as citizens of this great nation, show hope, encouragement, and support to the other builders of this tower. Through both the good times of prosperity and the bad times of error, we must stand truly as we were meant to - upright, justly, kindly, freely. We cannot be torn by error or war, but instead these trials should bind us together all the more firmly so that we may not be broken. May the world follow our example, should we choose to stand as patriotic, kind, freedom-loving Americans, just as we were meant to.
